Article Info	ABSTRACT
Article history: Received - Revised - Accepted -	Marriage is one of the important elements in life. It is important for every individual to have a marriage orientation so that it is easier to determine what to do now to prepare for the desired future marriage, including individuals who are having early marriages. This study aims to determine the effect of social support and self-acceptance on marriage orientation in individuals who perform early marriages. This study uses a quantitative approach. The subjects of this study were 70 individuals who performed early marriage and were selected using purposive sampling technique. The data collection method used was a scale of marriage orientation, social support and self-acceptance. The collected data were analyzed using multiple linear regression analysis with the help of the Statistical Package for Social Science (SPSS) 25.0 for windows program. The results showed that: (1) There was a significant influence between social support and self-acceptance on marriage orientation in individuals who performed early marriage with a value of $t_{count} > t_{table}$ (6.954 > 3.13) and a value of $p = 0.000$ ($p < 0.05$). The contribution of the influence (R^2) of social support and self-acceptance on marriage orientation in individuals who carry out early marriages is 0.336; (2) There is a significant effect of social support on marriage orientation in individuals who perform early marriage with the beta coefficient (β) = 0.093 and the value of $t_{count} > t_{table}$ (3.469 > 1.995) and the value of $p = 0.002$ ($p < 0.05$); (3) There is a significant effect of self-acceptance on marriage orientation in individuals who perform early marriage with the beta coefficient (β) = 0.556, and the value of $t_{count} > t_{table}$ (5.042 > 1.995) and the value of $p = 0.000$ ($p < 0.05$).
